

HEMOPHAGOCYtic LYMPHOHISTIOCYTOSIS

Hemophagocytic lymphohistiocytosis (HLH) is a disorder of the immune system primarily affecting young infants and children. The prevalence of HLH is 1.2 in every 1,000,000 children under the age of 15.

We currently know that HLH occurs either on the basis of genetic defect or as a secondary form with underlying diseases such as infections, cancer, or rheumatic disease.

The onset of HLH is usually early in life and a persistent cure can only be achieved with aggressive chemotherapy treatments and successful Bone Marrow Transplant.

There are several histiocytic disorders: LCH, HLH, JXG, Erdheim-Chester, and Rosai-Dorfman.

To learn more about HLH and other histiocytic disorders, please visit the Histiocytosis Association website at:

The objectives of the Research Program are to fund worthy scientific research projects, educate physicians and scientists, encourage and support symposia into histiocytic disorders, directly participate in research projects, and encourage publication of scientific information. Please help us reach our goal of $8,000 with your donation today!

ABBY'S STORY

Abby is a fun, happy 15-year-old girl. In late 2014 she started experiencing pain in her shoulder. At first we assumed she was having growing pains and we did all sorts of home remedies but the pain kept increasing. In early March 2015 the pain was worse and she was unable to perform some of her daily activities (taking a shower, dressing herself, combing her hair). After months of tests and spending some time in the hospital, Abby was diagnosed with Langerhans cell histiocytosis (LCH), a rare disease that causes an overproduction of white blood cells that can lead to organ damage and the formation of tumors and lesions. In Abby's case she had a single lesion on her second rib. The lesion had eroded her rib to the point of her rib being fractured; this caused a lot of pain for Abby and also led us to months of physical therapy. Her physicians opted to treat the lesion with a steroid injection in hopes that the lesion would shrink and it did!

This journey was hard and exhausting but Abby has learned that she can do hard things. This diagnosis hasn't slowed her down at all and she is still active in her church, plays volleyball for her school & through the local YMCA. She would tell you her faith (her favorite verse: Jeremiah 29:11), family and friends helped her most during her hard days and she wants to be able to give hope to others who need help, that's why funding is so important.

WHY WE RUN

We are running to raise money for this "orphan disease" so that no child has to go through what Jeffrey had to go through. This is a rare disease and there isn't a lot of research money. It is up to the families of the children stricken with it. Please donate and help find a cure.
